ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A semiconductor device comprises a plurality of gate lines composed of line shapes to function as gate electrodes in a plurality of transistors and separated from a substrate by a gate insulating layer, each having an upper metal silicide layer; and a plurality of source/drain regions formed on the substrate between said gate lines solely by carrying out impurity implantation processes.